

At Winter, we begin with extensive investigation to understand the existing conditions.

When you discover an unanticipated environmental issue – asbestos, lead or the like – in the midst of your hotel renovation, whom will you call? And how much will it cost you to have one firm stop working so that another can address the problem?

This look behind the walls saves both time and money during your renovation.

Further environmental testing helps us understand the materials within the building — including the likes of lead and asbestos, which need to be handled properly. Perhaps most importantly, we develop realistic contingencies: No matter how much investigation is performed upfront, it is likely you will encounter unforeseen conditions. When you do, Winter's fully-integrated environmental services afford you a seamless way to address the issue midstream — as part of the renovation, not a distraction from it.
